THE IN-HOUSE LEGAL DEPT. DILEMMA

Increasing economic and social uncertainty means greater business challenges. Yet in-house legal teams are being asked to do more with less.

This perennial "in-house dilemma" reflects a world that is increasingly more regulated and a business environment that is becoming harder than ever. These dynamics require businesses to pursue new and better ways of operating.

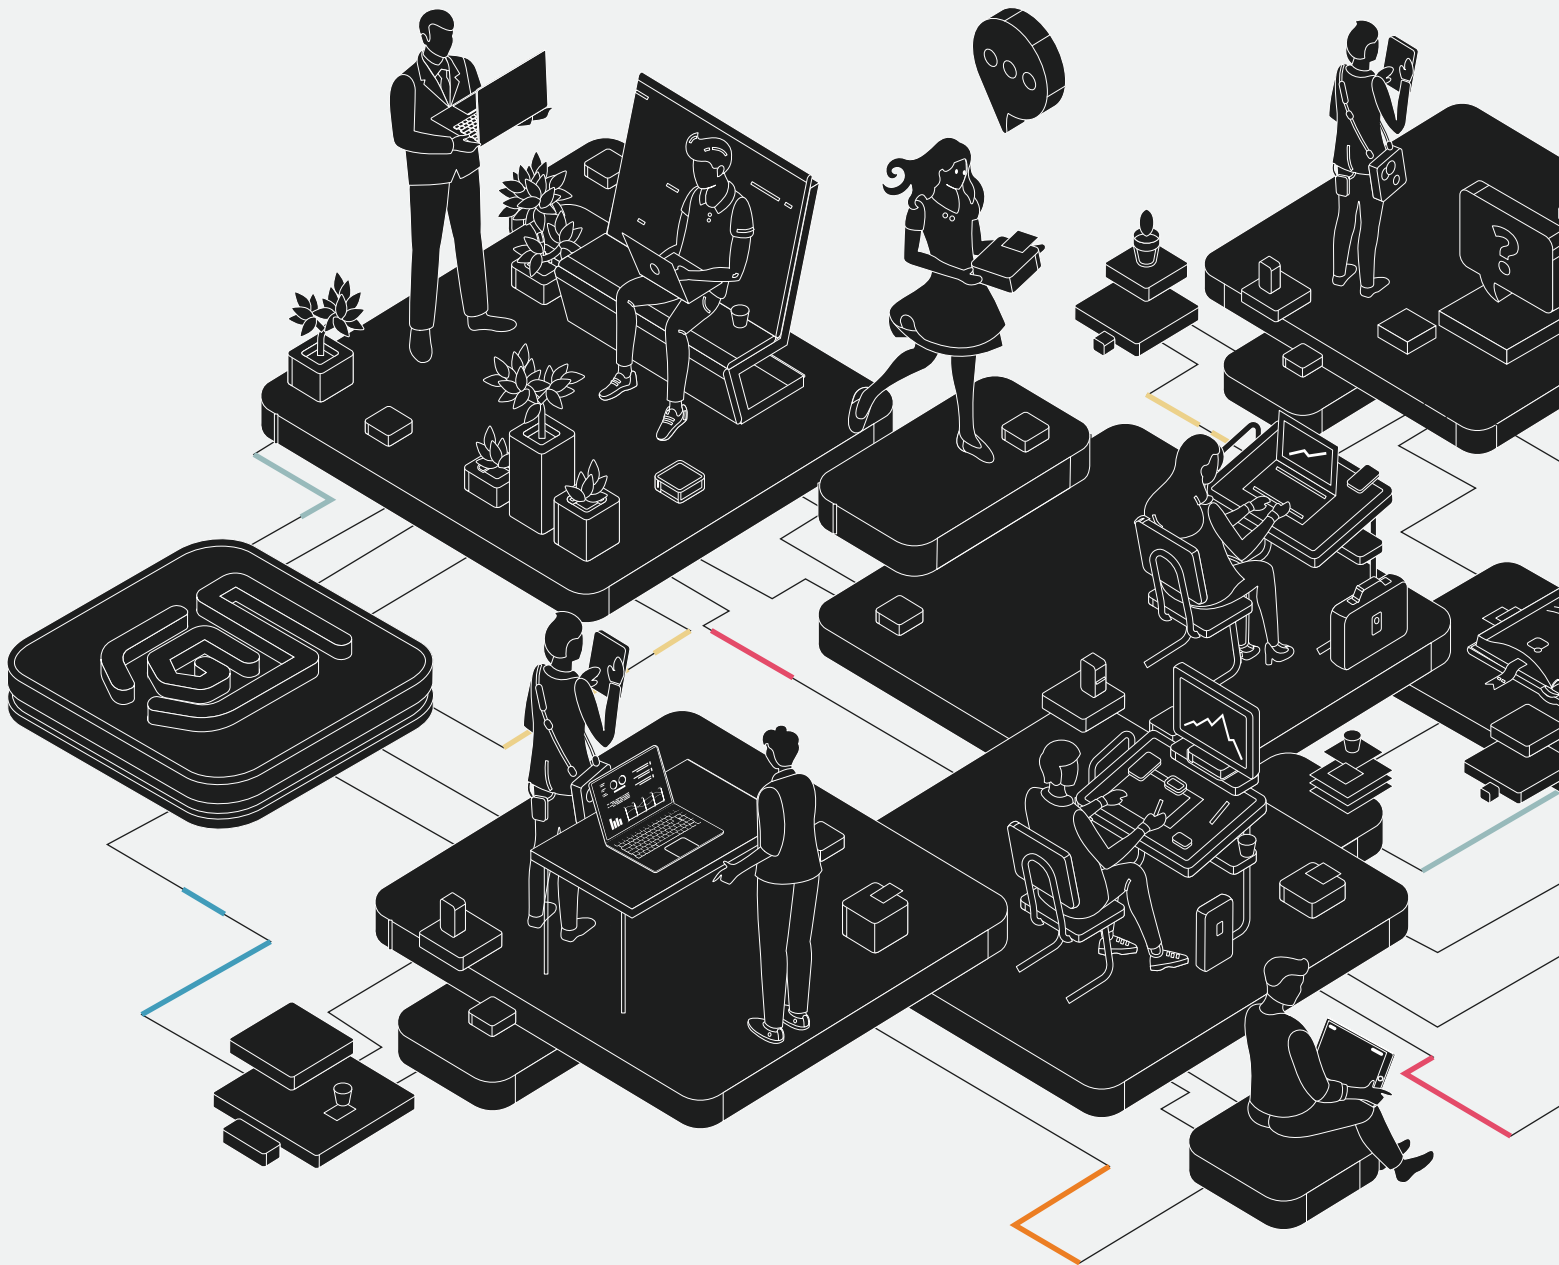

Businesses globally need to lean in hard on their in-house capability, but without infinite resources the only option is for in-house teams to change the way they work. This means a better, more efficient use of existing resources.

Every legal team has to be committed to constant function transformation with enhanced productivity outcomes whilst reducing resource consumption. New ways of thinking, operating, planning, resourcing, acting, organizing and focusing are required in the ongoing transformation process that now requires legal, technology, consultancy, financial, mentoring and knowledge skills.
